Course Management System: D2L.

Prerequisites: NONE.

Course Description:

This course focuses on the form of scripted television, its history, tropes and trends from the professional's point of view. Students will analyze comedy and drama, serials and procedurals, network, cable and internet shows to gain a full perspective of the scripted television landscape and develop a toolbox of techniques to use when creating television series.

“More than jazz or musical theatre or morbid obesity, television is the true American art form.”

– Kenneth Parcell, 30 ROCK

Learning Outcomes:

- ☐ Students will be able to explain, in well-written prose, what a television episode is about and or how it was produced. In addition to learning how to analyze and interpret narrative scripted television, students also gain an understanding of how the development process affects the final content. Students will not only watch and analyze television, they will learn the socioeconomic and technological factors impacting the genre and industry. The papers in this class focus on students' understanding of Basic Structure, Character, Theme and eventually a complete analysis.
- ☐ Students will be able to comment on the relationship between form and content in a work. They will learn the generic expectations of a particular form and how an artist (writer, producer, actor, etc) can complicate, enrich or subvert these expectations. Analysis and examination of the relationship between form and content represents the bulk of this course. Students are given a framework of knowledge regarding what to expect from half-hour and hourlong scripted programming, both in terms of form and content. Once this framework has been established, students examine ways in which artists used the form to deepen the audience's sense of character, tension and theme. Students investigate these relationships through class discussions, exam questions, several shorter papers and a longer final paper in which they write a complete analysis for a television series.
- ☐ Students will be able to assess the formal aspects of their subject and put these qualities into words, using, when appropriate, specialized vocabulary employed in class and readings. To better equip them in their analysis of television, students will learn a mix of common cinematic and literary language in addition to specialized screenwriting and film-making vernacular. This language will be employed in class discussions, exams and several papers.
- ☐ Where appropriate, students will be able to consider the original audience to witness a work of art and consider how their expectations differ from our own. This examination may include the elements of form, rhythm or style, the visual material and aesthetic of a piece. Students will be able to articulate a subject as well as write about it, explaining how narrative and aesthetic elements comprise a particular style of television (art). Students will learn about the context in which each episode aired and how this context affected its original reception. Students will also learn about the genre of television, how it has evolved over time and the technological innovations shaping the genre today.

Learning Outcomes will be met through lectures, viewings and readings on the history and story structure principles of many television forms and measured via written papers and quizzes.

Writing Expectations:

Writing Expectations will be met with graded assignments. There are FOUR paper packets which consist of several writing assignments. There is also one 6-10 page Final Paper in this course. Papers are expected to be free of spelling and grammatical errors. It's YOUR work, YOU'RE responsible for its clarity.

Online Course Management System:

D2L: <https://d2l.depaul.edu/d2l/home> Here students will find lecture slides, lecture videos, links to streams of the episodes for this course and any other relevant information they may need. This is where students will upload your assignments for this course. Login with Campus Connect information.

Homework:

All assignments for this course must be typed and submitted on D2L. Homework is due at the scheduled start of the asynchronous section meeting time for both the synchronous and asynchronous sections. Please pay attention to D2L for specific due dates and times.

Late Work Policy:

NO LATE WORK IS ACCEPTED unless you have a medical emergency, or you contact the professor for an extension. Extensions are granted on a case-by-case basis, but generally, the professor understands this course is not the most important thing in your life. In the event you need extra time on an assignment for this course, reach out to the professor to communicate your needs and demonstrate you're engaged in the course. The professor will do their best to accommodate you.

Email Policy:

Assignments are not accepted via email unless there is a malfunction with D2L. Please do not send the professor assignments via email unless they are requested. If you need to send an assignment via email, reach out to the professor explaining the situation but do not attach the file. The professor will reply, requesting the assignment. At that point, please send your materials. An email record such as this makes it much easier to keep track of what has been submitted and when it was submitted.

Reading:

The Television Genre Book (3rd Edition): Creeber, Glenn, editor. British Film Institute, Bloomsbury Publishing, 2018.

ISBN-13: 978-1844575268, ISBN-10: 1844575268

Select readings from this textbook will be made available to students. (You do not need to buy the book).

Other readings distributed by Professor.

Viewing:

Since this course focuses on studying television and television storytelling it is very important students have access to streaming services like Netflix, Hulu, HBO Max and Disney+ and/or an ability to purchase episodes on iTunes or Amazon. The subscriptions to these sites should be considered part of your 'books' expenses for this course. Please do not pirate materials for this course.

Panopto:

Many of the assigned episodes are available for free via Panopto. Where available, links to these episodes are provided on D2L. Log in with your Campus Connect credentials.

Watch and Learn:

As an optional addition to this course, "Watch and Learn" commentary tracks are available on D2L. These audio tracks offer additional insights from the professor on the material and are meant to be played while you watch the episode. The professor recommends you watch the episode without commentary first, then watch with commentary if you so choose.

Online Class Participation:

There are three types of class participation required for this course. Submissions may be submitted as written responses, audio files or video files.

Discussion Board posts ask about your familiarity with the series being exhibited and ask you to relate topics discussed in lecture to the assigned episodes. (10 points per post)

In Development posts ask you to engage in creative practice, pitching television projects similar to the ones we watch in class. The projects you come up with here may end up being something you write or even produce down the line. (5 points per post)

TV News Round Up posts ask you to find ONE article per week from an entertainment industry trade publication such as Variety, The Hollywood Reporter or Deadline Hollywood, and create a summary of the article explaining why this news item interesting and important to you personally and how you think it will impact the television industry. (Synchronous students will present their news items each week during our Zoom sessions). (10 points per post).

Instructor's Note:

The Professor may modify or revise this syllabus as circumstances and episode availability warrant.

College Policies

Online Course Evaluations

Evaluations are a way for students to provide valuable feedback regarding their instructor and the course. Detailed feedback will enable the instructor to continuously tailor teaching methods and course content to meet the learning goals of the course and the academic needs of the students. They are a requirement of the course and are key to continue to provide you with the highest quality of teaching. The evaluations are anonymous; the instructor and administration do not track who entered what responses. A program is used to check if the student completed the evaluations, but the evaluation is completely separate from the student's identity. Since 100% participation is our goal, students are sent periodic reminders over three weeks. Students do not receive reminders once they complete the evaluation. Students complete the evaluation online in CampusConnect.

Academic Integrity and Plagiarism

This course will be subject to the university's academic integrity policy. More information can be found at <http://academicintegrity.depaul.edu/>. If you have any questions be sure to consult with your professor.

Academic Policies

All students are required to manage their class schedules each term in accordance with the deadlines for enrolling and withdrawing as indicated in the University Academic Calendar. Information on enrollment, withdrawal, grading and incompletes can be found at: cdm.depaul.edu/enrollment.

Students with Disabilities

Students who feel they may need an accommodation based on the impact of a disability should contact the instructor privately to discuss their specific needs. All discussions will remain confidential.

To ensure that you receive the most appropriate accommodation based on your needs, contact the instructor as early as possible in the quarter (preferably within the first week of class), and make sure that you have contacted the Center for Students with Disabilities (CSD) at: csd@depaul.edu.
